Who Was Pablo Picasso?

Pablo Picasso was a Spanish painter and sculptor born on October 25, 1881, in a city called Málaga, Spain. From a very young age, Picasso showed a remarkable talent for drawing and painting. His father, who was also an artist, taught him how to draw, and Picasso quickly surpassed his father's skills. By the time he was just a child, he was already creating impressive artworks.

Early Life and Childhood

Growing up in Spain, Picasso was surrounded by art. His family encouraged his creativity, and he spent much of his childhood practicing his drawing skills. As a kid, Picasso was curious and loved experimenting with different styles of painting. He wasn't afraid to try new things, which later became a big part of his success.

Education and Training

Picasso attended art schools in Spain, including the prestigious Royal Academy of San Fernando in Madrid. However, he didn't always enjoy formal school settings and preferred learning by doing. Picasso's Artistic Journey

The Blue Period

Between 1901 and 1904, Picasso painted mostly in shades of blue and green. This phase is called the "Blue Period" because of the colors he used. During this time, he created paintings that showed sadness and loneliness. The subjects were often poor people, beggars, and outcasts, reflecting Picasso's feelings about the world around him.

The Rose Period

After the Blue Period, Picasso's mood seemed to brighten. From 1904 to 1906, he painted using warmer colors like pink and orange. This time is called the "Rose Period." His paintings featured circus performers, clowns, and harlequins, showing a lighter and more playful side of his personality.
